Program Description:

Information

France: University of Lille III

Founded in 1562, University of Lille III is the present-day evolution of l'Université de Douai.

The University of Lille system has over 90,000 students; the true embodiment of a city-campus. University buildings and halls are spread throughout the city, allowing students to integrate fully into French life.

Lille is a city in the northern French region of Nord-Pas-de-Calais, located in close proximity to major European cities like Paris, Brussels, Amsterdam, and London. Lille is a major European transportation hub, making it an ideal location for students interested in exploring the greater region and Western Europe.

In 2004, Lille was elected a European Capital of Culture. The temperate climate is similar to West Virginia, with warmer summers and cold winters.

With its strategic and central location, along with its expansive educational offering, Lille is an ideal choice for students interested in French language, or studying in France with proximity to many other European cities.
